The Historical, Cultural and Social Context of Central Asia

In the seventh speech, "On the Superior Mission of Man over Animals," Nizami defines the mission on earth in the context of the culture of peace: "the work of your short life is more glorious than your earthly lot."

And further: "In every matter, be trustworthy, be honest, be just, be true, be honorable, be harmless and quiet, and be moderate in food. The earthly workshop calls for the best of living on earth, attracting both great and small to urgent matters"; "You should not be proud or small, for you will not give up your life and the world does not need suffering from the bad and the good honor your country and in the bad and in the good they will be a reflection" [ibid. P. 242].

Here Nizami conveys the profound meaning of the culture of peace, mercy, and kindness with the attitude towards animals.
